Studebaker

The Beginning of the House of Studebaker

In the summer of 1736, nearly two In the summer of 1736, nearly two hundred years ago, the good ship Harle left Rotterdam, Holland, for the port of Philadelphia, and among the three hundred and eighty passengers there were five whose names were Studebaker. Sixty-two years later, in 1798, at York county, Pennsylvania, mention is made of the first American descendants: Peter Studebaker, and his son, Peter Studebaker, baker, and his son, Peter Studebaker, Jr., wagon makers. A few yourh later we find John

In 1853, J. M. Studebaker crossed the plains to California in a Studebaker wagon, returning five years later with $7.000 in gold. The gold was incidental, but his prophetic vis-ion of the western empire to be was vittally important. He inspired his brothers with the same vision, and they, too, saw the business opportuni-ties which must come to a firm able to build a wagon good enough to en dure the rigors of service in the new country.

Studebaker built the first wagons which bore upon their banners "Westward ho, to California." Soon West With his three sons, Clement, "Westward ho, to California." Soon the two remaining brothers joined to Ashland, Ohio, where two more sons were born to him. And now we have the five brothers who founded the house of Studebaker.
